Doctoral Studies in Special Education

The faculty of Special Education at Northern Illinois University is inviting applicants for its doctoral program in emotional and behavior disorders. This program combines coursework and fieldwork in applied research methodologies, instructional design, and interagency collaboration. Doctoral students are assigned to work with staff from special education, mental health, child welfare, legal services, and rehabilitation agencies in designing, implementing, and evaluating interagency efforts in serving children and adolescents with emotional and behavior disorders. This program is designed for individuals wishing to prepare for eventual research and training careers. A limited number of fellowships, which provide tuition, fees, a $12,000 living stipend, and a travel allowance, are available. For information, contact Michael H. Epstein, Special Education, Northern Illinois University, DeKalb, IL 60115; 815/753-8443.
